Clas Ohlson Case Study

Faber Exposize also dares to leave the beaten path and look for new and innovative interior solutions. In close collaboration with Scandinavian home decoration giant Clas Ohlson and French textile manufacturer Senfa, a test project was started using a printable wallpaper that has the ability to block Radio Waves.

Radio Waves are becoming more and more a health concern, especially for children. Although modern life would stop without these waves, there are places where we would rather not have them. For example, classrooms and specific areas in hospitals, but also children's rooms at home would truly become a healthier place without them.

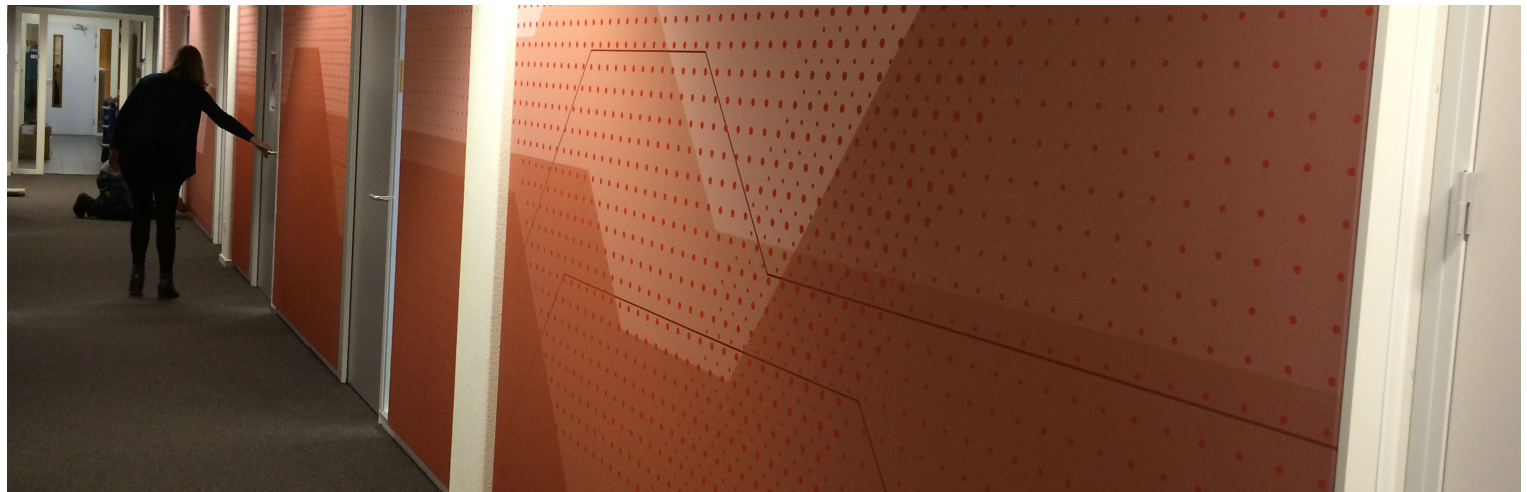

The use of this wallpaper can significantly reduce the Radio Waves in those spaces and by customizing the print, it fits into any interior.

Jet2 Case Study

FaberExposize UK worked with Jet2.com & Jet2holidays to refresh their commercial offices in the heart of Leeds City Centre.

Wall mounted tension graphics, canvas wall coverings and PVC foam board were printed and installed in a number of communal areas and meeting rooms creating a travel inspired theme throughout.

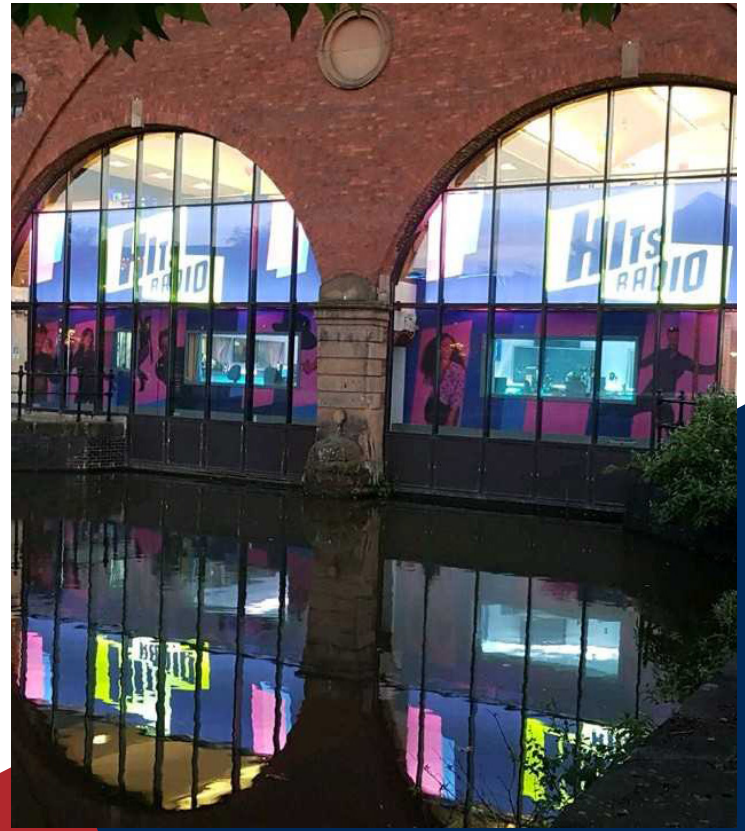

Bauer Media Case Study

FaberExposize UK were preferred suppliers for Bauer Media, to complete a commercial re-branding project for their Key 103 Radio Station to Hits Radio, based in Manchester.

The project consisted of printing and installing 9m x 3m lightboxes within the waterfront archways at the forefront of the building, eight other backlit and front lit tension frames throughout the offices and self-adhesive wall coverings.

Contra vision was also printed and installed at the front of the building to create privacy. Clear vinyls were used on glass meeting room doors to create subtle branding.
